SUNDAY APPRAL

THE WANTS OF WOMARKIND When young in years their wants are great— bolls and sugar, cakes and toys, But at it at time their chiefest want Is just to make a deafening noise.

Their next wast is a frock that's long, When first they glance cross-eyed at boys; They then their dolls in the corner throw, And smash to flinders all their teys!

With dresses now looped up before, They wish that they were only tall, That they might look o'er little boys, And wear a smashin' waterfall!

When all these things bave been obtained, They fine themselves as tight's they can, And then-look out for their greats at want— A dashing, jovial, "nice young man." A husband won, fine clothes come next, And then she'll be a lady. As mouths roll round, she then desires A "derlin' yittle baby ?"

And if this little babo's a boy, Toey wish his "Yitle hair would curl;" And just to keep miss company, They wish they had a "Yittle girt!"

This" yittle girl" at lest appears— The mother with its carls doth tey, And still her heart is not contani— She wants another "yittle boy!"

The early history of Mr. Webster at the New Hampshire bar is too well known to need repetition, but it will not be amiss to give the first impression which he made upon Mr. Mason, as related by Mason himself:

He broke upon me like a thunder shower in July, sudden, portentous, sweeping all before it. I had heard of him, but this was the first case in which he appeared at our bar. A criminal prosecution was pending in which I had arranged a very pretty defense as against the Attorney General, Atkinson, who was able enough in his way, but whom I PRINTING HOUSE being absent, Webster conducted the case for him, and turned in the most masterly manner the line of my defense. carrying with him all but one of the jurors, so that I barely saved my client No. 15 West Court Street, at the last moment by my best exertions I was never more surprised than by his remarkable exhibition of unexpected power.
